

OECD Common Reporting Standard Overview

The Common Reporting Standard (CRS) was developed by the OECD to improve international tax transparency.

Financial institutions are required to identify accounts held by foreign tax residents and report them to tax authorities.

CRS enables automatic exchange of financial account information between participating jurisdictions.

Countries with stronger transparency frameworks are generally considered lower risk for offshore tax abuse.